

STUART MOODY
Biographical sketch

Stuart Moody, MA, grew up writing letters to elected officials on issues of land use, air pollution, and wilderness protection. In Marin County, he led the Rethinking Plastics campaign, putting plastics reduction on the environmental agenda. Accomplishments of that campaign include five municipal ordinances and resolutions, waste-reduction policies adopted by several agencies and schools, and over 8 tons of plastic produce bag waste eliminated annually. Stuart chaired the Citizens Advisory Committee on Zero Waste and served on the advisory committee for the Marin County Fair, “The Greenest County Fair on Earth.”

Since moving to Tucson in 2012, his community activities have included: drafting a Climate Adaptation Plan for the City’s Climate Change Committee; convening the Shade Tucson coalition, a collaborative dedicated to increasing the city’s shade canopy to 15%; co-founding a neighborhood resilience working group; and, most recently, facilitating the Sustainable Tucson’s Ambassadors of Sustainability program. In his spare time, he teaches music at Khalsa Montessori School.
